11TH ANNUAL INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IRISH DIMENSIONS IN BRITISH EDUCATION

SATURDAY 26TH & SUNDAY 27TH MARCH 1994

EXILES AND ERIN: IMAGES AND REALITIES

This conference is aimed at teachers, parents, first and second generation Irish, Irish Community organisations and all those interested in the relationship between culture and education – especially students and teaching staff in secondary, further, community and higher education.

This year there will be four guest speakers:

- 1) LIAM GREENSLADE, Institute of Irish studies University of Liverpool, "LIGHTNING IN THE BLOOD: ISSUES IN THE HEALTH OF IRISH PEOPLE IN BRITAIN" discussion of the health of Irish migrants in Britain today, examining the cultural, historical and political background to high rates of mortality and mental illness.
- SEAN HUTTON, Community Care Development Co-ord Federation of Irish Societies, "MEETING THE NEEDS OF THE IRISH COMMUNITY IN BRITAIN"

 this paper will examine the needs of the Irish community in Britain, especially in the field of community care, and the ways in which these needs are met through statutory provision and by the Irish voluntary sector. It will discuss some of the further steps which need to be taken in order to adequately meet these needs.
- 3) PROF JAMES O'CONNELL, of the Peace Studies Department, University of Bradford "CAN SMALL CULTURES SURVIVE?" a comparative study with special reference to the Irish, against the background of contemporary developments in Europe and the wider world.
- 4) DR MARY HARRIS of the Irish Studies Centre at the University of North London "INTERNAL EXILE" BELFAST CATHOLICISM, POVERTY AND POLITICS IN THE INTER-WAR YEARS. Contemporary interpretations of Catholic poverty in Belfast, the search for solutions within the framework of Catholic social teaching and the increasing detachment of Catholics from the state and from the Catholic poor.

includes works by Lenin, Trotaky, Radek, Chicherin, and statements the Communist International.

The separatist revolution in Internat was seen as a major break in the elevantieth-century imperial world order. The Irish fight for freedom caught attention of the world, and held a special faccination for the Botsh leadership in Russia, not less because Marx and Engels had alresidentified Ireland as the key to social revolution in Britain. Few people real how seriously the Russians reflected on the Irish national question.

D. R. O' Connor Lysaght has edited the first complete collection of soutests on this issue. They show how the Russian revolutionaries analyzed eleuation of a small country assertings its rights. The book is full of its discussion and critical insight, and is essential reading for anyons who we to know how the trish experience was viewed by internationalists. The debrewels how seriously Lenin and his circle regarded the democratic strug of a small nation, and forms an important chapter in the history of Community and the second of the Fourth International. His works include an history of twenty-six country state. The Republic of Internat include an history of twenty-six country state. The Republic of Internat Three Socialist Internation (1990). He has completed a book on class struggle during the International.

TRUTH THE FURST CASUALTY is a book written by a criminal lawyer of almost thirty years experience, about injustice and untruth in England and Ireland. Both Countries share a system of law and a tradition of a strong independent legal profession which were once a source of mutual pride and the envy of the rest of the world. Both Countries were accustomed to regard intimidation of witnesses, police brutality, fabricated evidence and force and false confessions as the speciality of the South American republics and far removed from these islands. Not any more. Too many innocent people have been convicted as a result of such conduct that to maintain such a position is to mvite ridicule and contempt. Chapter 1 deals with the events of 30 January 1972 when soldiers of the Parachute Regiment shot dead 13 unarmed civilians in the streets of Derry. Seven Derry priests issued a statement accusing the soldiers of shooting indiscriminately into a fleeing crowd and said they were trained criminals differing from the terrorists only in the veneer of respectability that a uniform gives them. The author considers that the Report of Lord Widgery, the then Lord Chief Justice was a cleverly contrived whitewash and cover-up. In Chapter 2 the author examines the case of the Maguire Seven and the Guildford Four, and suggests that although there has been a whispering campaign against them maintaining their guilt even after their convictions were quashed, the lives of eleven innocent people were blighted by perjured prosecution evidence. The next chapter deals with a case known as the Hackney Arms Trial held in London in June 1972 where six Irish people were charged with possessing firearms. The prosecution suddenly collapsed when it became apparent that a Special branch informer was involved, and the prosecution declined to call him to give evidence

In Chapter 4 the case of Edward Manning Brophy is discussed. This is one of the leading legal authorities on the admissibility of evidence adduced at the voir dire - the trial within a trial. Mr. Brophy confessed, freely and openly the author suggests, to membership of the Provisional IRA. His conviction (and sentence of five years imprisonment) for that offence was

The next chapter deals with the killings by British Army soldiers of John Boyle, age 16 years and Majella O'Hare, aged 12. Efforts were made to conceal the circumstances of the deaths by outright lies by the Army. Chapter 6 examines the evidence in the case of a 15 year old boy, who was a pupil at a special school, with a mental age of seven. He was ordered to be detained for three years following his conviction based entirely on written confession statements made by him after

The final chapter examines the horrendous killing of two unarmed men, Seamus Grew and Roderick Carrol, by members of the security forces in County Armagh in December 1982.

False and misleading information was provided to the CID officers investigating the killings. The author discloses new evidence that 22 days before he was shot dead, Roderick Carrol had made a written complaint about death threats made against him by the security forces in extensive questioning by two police officers.

from the witness box.

quashed on appeal.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A BOTTLE-WASHER

After 60 years, a NEW EDITION of Tom BARCLAY'S classic autobiography of a second generation Irish person in Britain is available. MEMOIRS AND MEDLEYS - THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A BOTTLE-WASHER (1852-1933), with new introductions, relevant to the fields of Irish Studies, political science, and allied interests, will shortly be published.

For readers with an interest in things Irish, Barclay's story is essential for an understanding of the migrant and second generation experiences in Britain in the period c.1850-1930. Long out of print, the autobiography covers:-

- a childhood spent in the Irish "rookeries" of Leicester, a town of strong Protestant opinions and traditions.

- graphic descriptions of a Catholic education and upbringing, and of attendant anti-Irish prejudice.

- The use of the Irish tongue by his family and others in Leicester, and the vital community significance of this survival.

- views of current affairs from the Fenians through to disillusionment with the

- views of current affairs, from the Fenians, through to disillusionment with the Free State of the 1920's.

- a complete chapter devoted to Conradh na Gaeilge (the Gaelic League), and Barclay's cultural experiences in turn-of-the-century Ireland. He took his roots seriously, learning Irish in London in the heyday of the League, and meeting famous personalities of the Gaelic Revival period such as Pierce Beasley, W.P. Ryan, P.T. Macginly, Fionan MacColm, Sean O'Cahan and Dr. Henry.

- a positive appreciation of the place of traditional Irish music, song and dance in the life of the Irish community in Britain.

Until now, Barclay's story has been used only very selectively by a few historians of the Irish in Britain. Only by reading the complete work can a lucid picture of the fascinating life of a Second generation Irish person in Britain be formed.

The New Edition: the twin introductions cover all aspects of Barclay's life and importance. NESSAN DANAHER B.A., M.Ed, Co-ordinator of The Irish Studies Workshop at Soar Valley Community College, Leicester, and doctoral student at the Irish Studies Centre, University of North London, analysis and discusses Barclay's place amongst the Irish in Britain and the cultural significance of his work for issues of social, ethnic and psychological identity.

DR. DAVID NASH, recently at the Urban Studies Centre, University of Leicester, and now Lecturer at Brookes University, Oxford, deals with Barclay's central involvement in Secularism, Socialism and other forms of radical politics. Barclay was actively in touch with such leading political lights as G.B. Shaw, John Ruskin, William Morris and Edward Carpenter; in 1890 he was Leicester delegate to the Socialist League Conference in London.

Self taught, Tom Barclay (1852-1933) the freethinking son of Catholic Irish migrants, was in turn poet, linguist, social reformer and littérateur, he was the friend of Wm. Morris, George Bernard Shaw, etc.

A major reprint of this important work.

With revised introductions and illustrated with photographs of the period.
